UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF FLORIDA
CASE NO. 21-2989-MDL-ALTONAGA/Damian

In re: JANUARY 2021 SHORT SQUEEZE TRADING LITIGATION

REPORT OF DANIEL R. FISCHEL

FEBRUARY 16, 2023

I. QUALIFICATIONS

1. I am President of Compass Lexecon, a consulting firm that specializes in the application of economics to a variety of legal and regulatory issues. I am also the Lee and Brena Freeman Professor of Law and Business Emeritus at The University of Chicago Law School. I served previously as Dean of The University of Chicago Law School, Director of the Law and Economics Program at The University of Chicago, and as Professor of Law and Business at The University of Chicago Graduate School of Business, the Kellogg School of Management at Northwestern University, and at the Northwestern University Law School.

2. Both my research and my teaching have concerned the economics of corporate law and financial markets. I have published approximately fifty articles in leading legal and economics journals and am coauthor, with Judge Frank Easterbrook of the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals, of the book The Economic Structure of Corporate Law (Harvard University Press, 1991). Courts of all levels, including the Supreme Court of the United States, have cited my articles as authoritative. My curriculum vitae, which contains a list of my publications, is attached hereto as Appendix A.

3. I have served as a consultant or advisor on economic issues to, among others, the United States Department of Justice, the United States Securities and Exchange Commission ("SEC"), the National Association of Securities Dealers, the New York Stock Exchange, the Chicago Board of Trade, the Chicago Board Options Exchange, the Chicago Mercantile Exchange, the New York Mercantile Exchange, the United States Department of Labor, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Resolution Trust Corporation, the Federal Housing Finance Agency, and the Federal Trade Commission.

4. I am a member of the American Economic Association and the American Finance Association. I am also a former Trustee of the Becker Friedman Institute at the University of Chicago. I am a former Advisor to the Corporate Governance Project at Harvard University, a former member of the Board of Directors of the Center for the Study of the Economy and the State at The University of Chicago, and former Chairman of the American Association of Law Schools' Section on Law and Economics. I have testified as an expert witness in proceedings in federal and state courts across the country.

5. I have been assisted by Compass Lexecon's professional staff. Appendix B lists materials that I have considered in forming my opinions in this matter.[1] My analyses and opinions are based solely on the work performed by me and those under my direction. Compass Lexecon bills my time at a rate of $1,750 per hour. My compensation is not contingent on the outcome of this case.

II. BACKGROUND, ASSIGNMENT AND SUMMARY OF CONCLUSIONS

6. Robinhood Markets, Inc. ("Robinhood") is an online trading platform founded in 2013.[2] Robinhood offers brokerage services through Robinhood Financial LLC, the customer-facing introducing broker, and clearing services through Robinhood Securities, LLC, both of which are registered broker dealers. Robinhood's trading platform allows customers to "invest commission-free in U.S.-listed stocks and exchange traded funds ('ETFs'), as well as related options and American Depository Receipts—all from their smartphones."[3] In addition to its trading platform, Robinhood offers additional products and services including a premium subscription service that provides additional features such as professional research and access to investing on margin.[4] The margin investing feature allows customers to borrow money from Robinhood and use the funds to purchase securities.[5]

7. Robinhood's primary source of revenue is "transaction-based" revenue, which refers to "amounts earned from routing customer orders…to market makers."[6] Robinhood further explains that "[w]hen customers place orders for options, cryptocurrencies, or equities on our platform, we route these orders to market makers and we receive consideration from those market makers. With respect to equities and options trading, such fees are known as payment for order flow ('PFOF') …"[7] In addition to transaction-based revenues, Robinhood earns net interest revenues and other revenues, which include premium subscription fees, among other things.[8]

8. At the beginning of January 2021, certain stocks began experiencing large increases in prices and volatility that many market participants acknowledged were unrelated to news about the companies' performance and future outlook.[9] Many of these stocks were being prominently discussed by individual investors on social media platforms such as the Reddit online forum WallStreetBets.[10] Given the widespread media attention and discussion on social media, these stocks became known as "meme stocks."[11] Commentators on such forums noted that many of the stocks were being heavily sold short[12] by large institutional investors and viewed the large short positions as an opportunity to generate a buying frenzy in the stocks and thus create a "short squeeze."[13] A "short squeeze" occurs when the price of a heavily shorted stock increases, forcing short sellers who are betting that the stock price will decline to "cover" their short positions by buying the stock, causing the stock price to rise further.

9. By mid- to late- January 2021, the prices for many of the "meme stocks" experienced unprecedented increases in prices and volatility, reaching levels that were dramatically higher than their prices before the run-up. For example, the price of GameStop Corp. ("GameStop" or "GME"), perhaps the most widely discussed "meme stock," increased from its opening price of $19.00 on January 4, 2021, to as high as $380.00 on January 27, 2021, an increase of approximately 1,900 percent.[14] Another widely discussed "meme stock" was AMC Entertainment ("AMC"), whose price increased from its opening price of $2.01 on January 4, 2021 to as high as $20.36 on January 27, 2021, an increase of approximately 825 percent.[15]

12. A short sale "allows investors to profit from a decline in a security's price." In a short sale transaction "[a]n investor borrows a share of stock from a broker and sells it. Later, the short-seller must purchase a share of the same stock in order to replace the share that was borrowed…The short-seller anticipates the stock price will fall, so that the share can be purchased later at a lower price than it initially sold for; if so, the short-seller will reap a profit." 10. In response to the large increases in volatility and prices, several brokerages implemented various risk mitigation measures, including trading restrictions on certain "meme stocks" in late January 2021. The New York Stock Exchange ("NYSE") and National Association of Securities Dealers Automated Quotations ("NASDAQ") stock exchange also halted trading for some of the "meme stocks" due to high volatility at various times during the trading day on January 27 and January 28, 2021.[16]

11. On January 27, 2021, Interactive Brokers, a brokerage firm providing direct-access trade execution and clearing services to retail investors and institutions,[17] placed restrictions on options trading in AMC, BlackBerry, Express, GameStop, and Koss.[18] On the same date, Robinhood and Charles Schwab, another brokerage firm that, among other services, provides trading platforms to manage and trade retail investments,[19] announced restrictions related to margin trading

16. For example, the NYSE halted trading in GME three times for a total of 15 minutes on January 27, 2021 and 19 times on January 28, 2021 for a total of over 92 minutes. Trading in AMC was halted six times for a total of over 31 minutes on January 27, 2021 and 13 times on January 28, 2021 for a total of approximately 66 minutes. See Regulatory Halts, available at https://www.nyse.com/trade-halt-historical (last accessed February 16, 2023). See also e.g., "*AMC Entertainment Holdings Inc. in AMC and GameStop.[20] TD Ameritrade, a brokerage firm that was acquired by Charles Schwab but continued to provide its own trading platform,[21] also placed restrictions on GameStop and other securities, but did not disclose exactly what the restrictions were, stating that it was taking "actions like increasing margin requirements, or limiting certain types of transactions, like short sales and those that may involve unlimited risk."[22] Throughout January 27, 2021, Robinhood also reduced position limits for option contracts for stocks such as GameStop, AMC, Express ("EXPR"), and Tootsie Roll ("TR") and late in the day on January 27, 2021, implemented "Position Closing Only" or "PCO" restrictions for GameStop and AMC options contracts expiring on January 29, 2021.[23] This meant that holders of options in those stocks that expired on January 29, 2021 could only sell their options.[24] In the evening of January 27, 2021 on the West Coast, Robinhood imposed $10,000 equity position limits for AMC, Blackberry ("BB"), EXPR, GME, Koss ("KOSS"), and Nokia ("NOK").[25]

completion of unsettled trades in its customers' accounts."[26] In response to the NSCC's deposit requirement, before the markets opened on January 28, 2021, Robinhood implemented equities PCO restrictions (which meant Robinhood's customers could sell, but could not purchase stocks) on AMC, BB, Bed Bath & Beyond ("BBBY"), EXPR, GME, KOSS, NOK, and trivago ("TRVG").[27]

13. Plaintiffs allege that placing these securities on PCO status would "limit customer purchases for certain volatile stocks that had driven the increased deposit requirements."[28] Plaintiffs further allege that "[o]nly because of [Robinhood's] decision to halt stock purchases in eight issuers" the NSCC waived $2.2 billion of charges and thus Robinhood was able to meet its deposit requirements with only an additional $700 million.[29]

14. Later on January 28, 2021, Robinhood's CEO Vladimir Tenev appeared on multiple news outlets to discuss Robinhood's decision to implement the trading restrictions. He explained that Robinhood did not put the restrictions in place "at the direction of any market maker or hedge fund…" but instead "to protect the firm and protect our customers…" due to the various regulatory capital requirements at play on January 28, 2021.[30] Tenev further stated that "[t]here was no liquidity problem" at Robinhood and that the restrictions were "done pre-emptively…[a]nd we're doing what we can to allow buying and to remove these restrictions in the morning."[31]

15. After the market closed on January 28, 2021, Robinhood removed its PCO restrictions and placed purchase limits on stocks and options of AMC, BlackBerry, Bed Bath and Beyond, Express, GME, Koss, Nokia, Tootsie Roll, and trivago.[32] The purchase limits meant that Robinhood account holders could once again purchase shares of these stocks as long as the total number of shares they held with Robinhood was below the limit. In the afternoon of January 29, 2021, Robinhood tightened these purchase limits for certain stocks.[33] For example, after the market closed on January 28, 2021, Robinhood implemented purchase limits on GME and AMC of 5 and 115 shares, respectively.[34] By the end of the day on January 29, 2021, Robinhood had tightened the purchase limits on GME and AMC to 1 share.[35] In the following days, Robinhood relaxed the purchase limits again (for example, on February 1, 2021 Robinhood relaxed the purchase limits to 350 shares for AMC and 20 shares for GME).[36] By the end of the day on February 2, 2021, purchase limits had been lifted on all stocks except AMC and GME. All purchase limits were removed by the end of the day on February 4, 2021.[37]

16. Plaintiffs' allegations relate to nine stocks: AMC Entertainment Holdings ("AMC"), Inc., Bed Bath & Beyond Inc. ("BBBY"), BlackBerry Ltd. ("BB"), Express Inc. ("EXPR"), GameStop Corp. ("GME"), Koss Corp. ("KOSS"), Tootsie Roll Industries Inc. ("TR"), and American Depositary Shares ("ADR") of foreign issuers Nokia Corp. ("NOK") and trivago N.V. ("TRVG") (the "Affected Stocks").[38] Plaintiffs seek to certify a class of "persons or entities" who held the Affected Stocks "as of the close of trading on January 27, 2021, and sold such shares at a loss between January 28, 2021, and February 4, 2021 (the "Class")."[39]

17. Plaintiffs make a series of allegations under sections 9(a) and 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act. In particular, Plaintiffs allege that Robinhood's implementation of various trading restrictions in the Affected Stocks between January 28, 2021 and February 4, 2021 (the "Class Period"), "distorted" the market prices of the Affected Stocks because of Robinhood's "domination of the online retail brokerage industry."[40] Plaintiffs further allege that "[w]ith [Robinhood's] brazen behavior—picking and choosing over six trading sessions not only which stocks its customers could purchase but also the total amount of shares in a particular issuer a customer could hold—Robinhood thumbed its nose at the bedrock principle of our free-market economy: the price of the stock is set by the law of supply and demand, unfettered by external controls."[41] Plaintiffs additionally allege that by "completely shutting down, initially, and later restricting, the demand side of the equation for the nine Affected Stocks…for days rather than just minutes, Robinhood unlawfully manipulated market prices for the Affected Stocks."[42] Plaintiffs further allege that Tenev's statements during the Class Period, namely that Robinhood did not implement its restrictions at the behest of any hedge funds and that Robinhood was not facing a liquidity crisis, harmed Plaintiffs because they "caused retail investors to reach their own conclusions [regarding the reasons for the restrictions], exacerbating the market volatility."[43]

18. I have been retained by Cravath, Swaine & Moore, counsel for the Defendants, to assess Plaintiffs' allegations regarding alleged market manipulation by Robinhood and to assess whether damages, if any, can be reliably determined on a class-wide basis without resort to individualized proof.

19. Based on a review of the materials listed in Appendix B and my analysis, I have reached the following principal conclusions:

- Plaintiffs cannot establish that potential Class Members relied on the integrity of the market prices on a class-wide basis.
- Plaintiffs cannot provide a common methodology to calculate damages if any.

20. I elaborate upon and provide the bases for my conclusions in the remainder of this report.

III. PLAINTIFFS CANNOT ESTABLISH THAT POTENTIAL CLASS MEMBERS RELIED ON THE INTEGRITY OF THE MARKET PRICES ON A CLASS-WIDE BASIS

21. As demonstrated below, the extreme price movements and unprecedented volatility of the Affected Stocks in the pre-Class Period[44] were unrelated to company-specific value-relevant information as, for example, can occur in a short squeeze. This was widely recognized at the time in the practitioner literature and by market analysts. Moreover, as recognized in the economic literature, the artificial prices, that, for example, can occur as a result of a short squeeze, are by definition necessarily temporary. This has important implications for determining whether potential Class Members relied on the integrity of the market price in an efficient market on a class-wide basis.

43. Complaint, ¶¶ 67-68, 77.

44. For the purposes of illustrating trading in the Affected Stocks prior to the Class Period, I define a pre-Class Period from January 4, 2021 (the first trading day of 2021) through January 27, 2021.

22. In my experience, plaintiffs in securities fraud class actions can avoid having to demonstrate actual reliance on the alleged false or misleading statements or other alleged misconduct on an individualized basis if they can invoke a presumption that they made their investment decisions by relying on the integrity of the market price in an efficient market. In this case, however, some, perhaps many potential Class Members in all likelihood made their investment decisions based on a belief of an inefficient market for reasons unrelated to – and often contrary to – a belief in the integrity of the market price as reflecting the true value of the Affected Stocks. This reality makes it impossible for Plaintiffs to demonstrate that potential Class Members are entitled to the presumption that they relied on the integrity of the market price on a class-wide basis. Whether potential Class Members did or did not rely on the integrity of the market price in making their investment decisions can only be determined on an individualized basis.

A. Market Commentary Attributed the Price Increases in the Affected Stocks to Short Squeezes and Extreme Social Media Driven Enthusiasm

23. The Affected Stocks experienced unusually large price increases during the pre-Class Period. Exhibit 1 shows the percentage change in prices for each of the Affected Stocks between January 4, 2021 and January 27, 2021. As the exhibit shows, some of the Affected Stocks increased dramatically in less than a one-month period. For example, the percentage increases in GME and AMC's stock prices between the opening prices on January 4, 2021 and the maximum trading prices during the pre-Class Period were 1,900 percent and 825 percent, respectively, versus only a 2.82 percent increase in the S&P 500. Using closing prices, GME and AMC's stock prices increased by 1,915 percent and 890 percent, respectively, versus only a 1.35 percent increase in the S&P 500.

24. The public information available to potential Class Members during the pre-Class Period emphasized that these skyrocketing stock prices could not be explained by company fundamentals. Market commentators, for example, attributed the large price increases for the Affected Stocks to short squeezes and/or extreme social media driven enthusiasm rather than improved fundamentals for the companies. For example:

AMC

- On January 27, 2021, Dow Jones News Service reported that "AMC Entertainment Holdings is trading at a new 52-week high on Wednesday, caught up in a strange euphoria affecting several stocks of downtrodden companies. … The stock joins a small group of companies that have been caught in a strange push and pull between professional short sellers, who hold bearish positions, and retail investors using Reddit forums and Robinhood accounts to buy and encourage others to do so."[45]

Bed Bath & Beyond

- Similarly, news articles attributed BBBY's stock price increases to "short bets backfiring – sending the shares to dizzying heights – 'non-fundamental market dynamics are controlling the tape.'"[46]

Blackberry

- On January 27, 2021, the Wall Street Journal reported that "[s]hares of a handful of firms such as GameStop Corp. and BlackBerry Ltd. have posted triple-digit gains in recent weeks, part of a frenzy whipped up by individual investors."[47]

Express

- On January 25, 2021, analysts commented that "[w]e are cautious on shares of Express, after rocketing 150% in the last two trading days on the heels of retails wider squeeze-play with most-shorted stocks up +14% versus least-shorted stocks +4% in the RUA index so far in 2021, coupled with an investor stampede following Will Meade's (Twitter personality and former pm) speculative tweet."[48]

GameStop

- On January 26, 2021, news articles reported that "[p]rofessional investors are worried: How can financial markets function when stock movements are so obviously disconnected from fundamentals,"[49] and "GameStop has been a darling of Reddit message board WallStreetBets, where hundreds of posters have been pushing for purchases of the stock after investors betting against the chain pushed short interest to

Koss

- On January 27, 2021, the Wall Street Journal reported, "Headphone maker Koss has also joined the party, and its shares jumped 109% premarket," referring to day traders "waging a battle against hedge-fund short sellers…"[51]

Nokia

- On January 27, 2021, Barrons.com reported that "[s]hares of the communications infrastructure supplier Nokia have continued to soar -- one of a growing group of stocks seeing outsize moves on the back of surging retail trading."[52]

Tootsie Roll

- On January 27, 2021, Bloomberg reported that "[t]he maker of Tootsie Pops has spiked to a record as retail traders pour into heavily-shorted stocks fueled by excitement over GameStop Corp.'s meteoric surge."[53]

Trivago

- On January 27, 2021, Bloomberg reported that "[t]rivago's share price has disconnected from fundamentals, surging over 100% intraday, likely at the hands of retail investors who made similar bets on AMC and GameStop"[54]

25. In addition to market participants' commentary in news articles, equity analysts' commentary similarly recognized that the price increases in the Affected Stocks, as can occur as part of a short squeeze, were artificial. For example:

54. "Trivago Shares Surge as Investors Eye Next AMC, GameStop: React," Bloomberg L.P., January 27, 2021, 03:03PM.

- "After surging over 100% year to date as of Jan. 15, very little has changed in GME's fundamental story. … We attribute GME's explosive upside movement to a mega short squeeze (short interest more than 100% of total float), and we think shares are primed for a crash in 2021."[55]
- "Over the past two weeks, GameStop (GME) shares have risen spectacularly on what media reports describe as a major short squeeze, in part enabled by extreme retail investor enthusiasm. Since last Jan. 12th GME shares have risen 642% (vs. +1% for S&P500)."[56]
- "BBBY is up ~73% through the first ~15 trading days of 2021, without any meaningful change in the retail environment or fundamentals of the business (versus a month ago)… With the environment roughly the same, the recent stock surge is more a result of a short squeeze against highly shorted retail names (see GME and AMC)."[57]
- "We are cautious on shares of Express, after rocketing 150% in the last two trading days on the heels of retails wider squeeze-play."[58]
- "Retail investors driving shares: Press reports indicate that AMC's recent rally (+110% YTD) has been driven by retail investors buying shares in order to trigger a short squeeze."[59]

26. This widespread public commentary available to potential Class Members acknowledging and publicizing the artificially high prices for the Affected Stocks makes it a virtual certainty that there are potential Class Members who made their investment decisions in an attempt to profit from these artificial price movements. This is the opposite of a belief in the integrity of the market price. As a result, reliance on the integrity of the market price cannot be determined on a class-wide basis and individualized inquiry is necessary.[60]

B. Economic Literature along with Market Commentary Recognize That Market Manipulations Such as Short Squeezes Cause Temporary Artificial Price Increases Followed by a Return to Lower Prices

27. The academic literature recognizes that short squeezes are a form of "market manipulation."[61] For example, Putniņš (2012) states, "'Corners' and 'squeezes' are techniques in which the manipulator secures a controlling position in the supply of an asset and/or derivative contract. The manipulator then uses this position to manipulate the price by exploiting investors that need the underlying asset to close out short positions."[62] Harris (2003) further comments, "[s]queezers are parasitic traders because they design trading strategies that profit only when they can exploit other traders. Their manipulations make prices less informative, and their trades greatly increase transaction costs for other traders."[63]

60. The class is defined as investors who sold at a loss. See Complaint, ¶ 1. In order for the class to consist entirely of investors who sold at a loss, it necessarily follows that many, if not all, potential class members purchased at the inflated prices resulting from the short squeeze and/or other social media driven enthusiasm. There is a high likelihood that these potential Class Members did not purchase based on a belief in the integrity of the market price.

Another article states that if a heavily shorted stock experiences a price increase for any reason, "it can quickly turn into a buying frenzy as the short sellers trip over one another to buy the shares…Panic-buying begets more panic-buying, egged on by speculators who know the situation the short sellers are in and actively try to put the screws to them. This is a short squeeze in action. And it's exactly what happened in the shares of GameStop." See "What Exactly Is a Short Squeeze?" Kiplinger.com, June 11, 2021 available at: https://www.kiplinger.com/investing/602165/what-exactly-is-a-short-squeeze (last accessed February 16, 2023).

28. The artificial prices caused by short squeezes are temporary and tend to be unrelated to company news, performance or prospects. As one commentator noted, "short squeezes are not based on company fundamentals. Rather they are driven by human behavior and technical factors." The article references a study of short squeezes between 2008 and 2021 and notes that "[s]hort squeezes typically don't last long…The average short squeeze in this data set lasted approximately 12 days from the onset to the peak," and that "[w]hen a short squeeze eventually exhausts itself, the stock price typically declines by -50% within the next 3-4 days."[64]

29. Market commentary during the Class Period also emphasized that the short-term artificial price increases of the Affected Stocks were predictably followed by price decreases. For example:

- "It is difficult to predict the day-to-day moves of GME shares but they are down 81% from highs and several factors that we believe have been instrumental in increasing share price (such as daily volume, short interest and online conversations) appear to be turning. …In our view, one of the major causes (along with very high short interest and trading volumes) for GME's share price increase is increased participation by retail investors which appears to have been exacerbated by social media platforms such as Twitter and Reddit. While still high on a relative or historic basis, GME mentions on Reddit (including on the wallstreetbets forum), short interest, and trading volumes have all declined significantly from recent peaks over the past several days. This has corresponded with a drop in GME's share price which is now $92.41 as of the market close on February 3rd, from an intraday high of $483 on January 28th."[65]
- "The wild run-up of trades popular with Reddit crowds is starting to come crashing down. GameStop Corp. sank 34% in U.S. pre-market trading, extending a 31% plunge on Monday. AMC Entertainment Holdings Inc. slid 25% and Express Inc. lost 18% … The speculative activity hatched online has captivated global markets, drawing attention from U.S. politicians and overwhelming brokerages around the world. Now, the speculative tide is turning. 'The short squeeze momentum met its inevitable end,' said Mark Taylor, a sales trader at Mirabaud Securities. 'It seems reasonably clear that as the cheerleading and rage against the machine dies down, the man on the street is left holding the bag again.' In GameStop, short interest plunged to 53% of the available shares, from more than 140% just last month, according to data from financial analytics firm S3 Partners."[66]

- "Traders have cited a few reasons for the recent GameStop mania calming down. The first is a rapid reduction in the number of shares being shorted, meaning fewer investors are betting on the video-game company's stock to fall. That has removed a lot of the fuel for the recent 'short squeeze' that sent the stock soaring as bearish investors were forced to buy back. …the shares they had sold short at higher prices to minimize their losses."[67]

30. The virtually certain awareness of many potential Class Members of the temporary nature of market manipulations such as short squeezes as well as market commentary attributing the Affected Stocks' price declines during the Class Period to the end of short squeezes again demonstrates that reliance on the integrity of the market price cannot be determined on a class-wide basis but requires individualized inquiry.

C. The Disconnect between Analysts' Price Targets for the Affected Stocks and the Highest Trading Prices of the Affected Stocks Further Demonstrates That It Is Unreasonable to Presume Potential Class Members Relied on the Integrity of the Market Price

31. Throughout the pre-Class Period analyst price targets remained well below the Affected Stocks' skyrocketing market prices. The level of target prices would have indicated to market participants that analysts not only did not expect prices to continue to increase, but they expected price decreases in the near future. This disconnect further indicates that potential Class Members may not have relied on the integrity of the market prices when making their investment decisions.

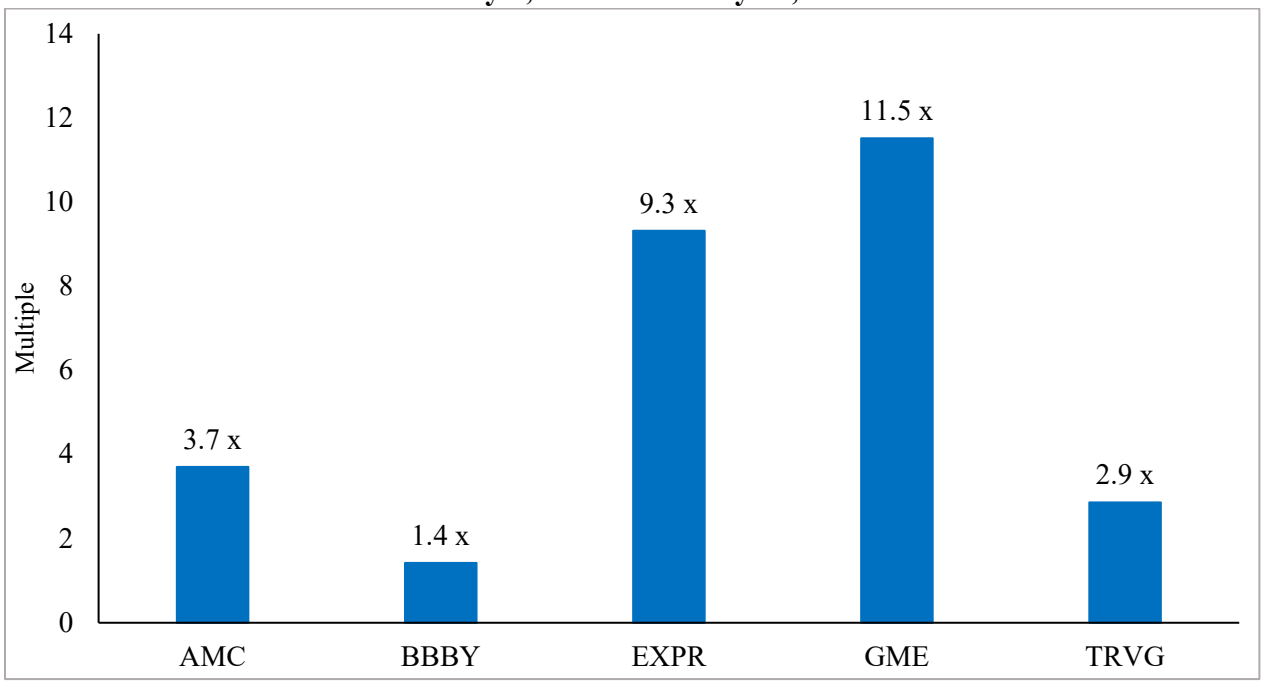

32. A sell-side equity analyst's target price reflects that analyst's prediction of a company's stock price, often 12 months in the future. Presumably, if analysts believed that the price increases in the Affected Stocks during the pre-Class Period reflected expectations for improved performance and higher cash flows in the future, they would have increased their target prices accordingly. Exhibit 2 shows that during the pre-Class Period the actual peak prices for the Affected Stocks were between 1.4 and 11.5 times higher than the maximum target prices for the Affected Stocks. For example, the highest price target for GME was $33.00, while GME's highest closing stock price between January 4, 2021 and January 27, 2021 was $380, or 11.5 times higher than the highest price target. Thus, analysts agreed with other market participants that the price increases were not due to company-specific value-relevant information. This is further evidence that many potential Class Members were likely aware of the artificial prices at the time of their purchases and therefore did not rely on the integrity of the market price.

D. Plaintiffs Cannot Establish That the Affected Stocks Traded in an Efficient Market

33. Plaintiffs in this case allege that they will rely upon the presumption of reliance established by the "fraud-on-the-market doctrine,"[68] which requires that the Affected Stocks traded in an efficient market, i.e., that stock prices quickly reflect all publicly available company information that is relevant to the value of the company. Plaintiffs further contend that they will demonstrate that "the Affected Stocks were traded in efficient markets" in part because "unexpected material news about the Affected Stocks was rapidly reflected in and incorporated into each company's stock price during the Class period."[69] The economic evidence is to the contrary.

34. The key test for determining whether a market is efficient is establishing that there is a "cause and effect" relationship between movements in stock prices and revelation of unexpected corporate events or financial releases.[70] The Affected Stocks fail this test because price increases during the period leading up to the Class Period were not associated with, and cannot be explained by, company-specific value-relevant information.

68. Complaint, ¶ 134.

69. Plaintiffs also state that the Affected Stocks traded in an efficient market because "[i] the Affected Stocks were liquid and traded with moderate to heavy volume during the Class Period; [ii] the Affected Stocks were traded on national exchanges such as the NASDAQ and NYSE, … [iii] were covered by analysts…[iv] unexpected material news about the Affected Stocks was rapidly reflected in and incorporated into each company's stock price during the Class period." Complaint, ¶ 134.

70. This is referred to as factor five in the Cammer factors. The Cammer factors are a well-known method used by courts to determine market efficiency. The "cause and effect" test in factor 5 is generally considered the most important factor among the Cammer factors (examples of other Cammer factors include (1) existence of "average weekly trading volume … in excess of a certain number of shares;" (2) "significant number of securities analysts followed and reported on the company's stock;" (3) existence of "numerous market makers;" (4) "the company was entitled to file an S-3 Registration Statement in connection with public offerings…;") See Cammer v. Bloom, 711 F. Supp. 1264-1301 (D.N.J. 1989), at 1285-87. On market efficiency, generally, see also e.g., E.F. Fama, "Efficient Capital Markets: II," The Journal of Finance 46, No. 5 (1991): 1575-1617.

35. To test whether the stock price increases for the Affected Stocks were associated with the release of new, value-relevant company-specific information, and thus whether the Affected Stocks traded in an efficient market, we performed an "event study."[71] An event study is a widely accepted empirical analysis that: (1) identifies the portion of the stock price return that is not explained by market and industry factors (i.e., the residual or abnormal return); and (2) identifies whether the residual returns are statistically significant, or sufficiently large that they are unlikely to be explained by random price fluctuations.[72] In an event study analysis, residual returns are typically considered statistically significant if they fall outside a 95 percent confidence interval (i.e., fall outside the range that accounts for 95 percent of random price fluctuations). Residual returns that fall outside the 95 percent confidence interval are considered to be significant at the 5 percent level. Using a 5 percent threshold implies that one would expect to observe statistically significant residual returns on 5 percent of days just by random chance alone (i.e., when there is no value-relevant company-specific news that affected the stock).

36. Exhibit 3 reports the residual returns in the Affected Stocks on the trading days during the pre-Class Period. It highlights in grey all dates with statistically significant price reactions. The exhibit shows a large number of statistically significant days during the pre-Class Period, indicating that, if markets are efficient, the price movements on some of these statistically significant dates should be due to value-relevant company-specific information. Accordingly, we searched news articles for mentions of the company names of the Affected Stocks in the headline and lead paragraphs of Dow Jones and Wall Street Journal articles, as well as Bloomberg news for each of the companies, between January 4, 2021 and January 27, 2021 to determine whether any value-relevant company-specific news was disclosed that could have impacted the price of the Affected Stocks on days when a statistically significant price movement occurred.[73] We supplemented the news articles searches by also searching for any SEC filings for the Affected Stocks' companies over the same time period. This review demonstrates that the vast majority of the price increases for all nine Affected Stocks cannot be explained by new value-relevant company-specific information.[74] Appendix D reports new potentially value-relevant company-specific news for each of the days during the pre-Class Period.

73. The supplemental Bloomberg news searches were performed on days with statistically significant price movements and no value-relevant company specific news from Dow Jones or the Wall Street Journal.

74. In fact, certain companies made public disclosures commenting on the lack of company-specific news underpinning the stock price increases.

    - On January 25, 2021, Blackberry's (BB) stock price increased from $14.04 to $18.92, with a statistically significant abnormal return of 27.62%. At the time, the company announced that it was "not aware of any material, undisclosed corporate developments and has no material change in its business or affairs that has not been publicly disclosed that would account for the recent increase in the market price or trading volume of its common shares." See "Press Release: BlackBerry Comments on Trading Activity at Request of the Industry Regulatory Organization of Canada (IIROC)," Dow Jones Newswires, January 25, 2021, 11:08 AM.
    - On January 27, 2021, Nokia's (NOK) stock price increased from $4.73 to $6.55, with a statistically significant abnormal return of 39.08%. The company issued a statement relating to the large increases in its stock price, stating that "Nokia is not aware of any material, undisclosed corporate developments or material change in its business or affairs that has not been publicly disclosed that would account for the recent increase in the market price or trading volume of its shares." See "Nokia Comments on Trading Activity Of Its Stock," Dow Jones Newswires, January 27, 2021, 01:15 PM.

37. Thus, I find that the Affected Stocks did not trade in an efficient market during the pre-Class Period.

IV. PLAINTIFFS CANNOT PROVIDE A COMMON METHODOLOGY TO CALCULATE DAMAGES IF ANY

38. As described above, the prices of the Affected Stocks increased dramatically and artificially during the pre-Class Period. These artificial price increases were widely recognized by market participants as temporary market manipulations and/or coordinated purchasing by retail traders due to heightened commentary on social media. Absent Robinhood's and other brokers' actions, there is no way to know in the but-for world whether prices would have kept rising, how long they would have remained artificially high, and how quickly they would have fallen to non-manipulated levels. Similarly, there is no way of knowing whether the potential Class Members' trading behavior in the but-for world would have differed from what actually occurred or whether potential Class Members would have suffered the same loss, a greater loss, made a profit in the Plaintiffs' but-for world, or would have traded at all. For example, potential Class Members in the but-for world posited by Plaintiffs may have avoided losses and made a profit if they were able to sell at higher prices before prices fell; alternatively, they may have incurred greater losses if absent the actions by Robinhood and other brokers they would have held on longer and sold only when prices returned to their pre-artificial price level. For these reasons, there is no common methodology to determine the amount of damages incurred by individual potential Class Members, if damages exist at all.[75] Individualized inquiry is required.

39. Moreover, given the volatile and non-uniform movements of each of the Affected Stocks during the Class Period, even small changes in the timing of trades could alter whether or not an individual incurred a loss as a result of a sale and therefore qualifies to be a potential Class Member. For example, Named Plaintiff Joseph Gurney purchased 21.27 AMC shares at an average price of $5.64 on January 26-27, 2021, and sold the shares at an average price of $8.01 for a gain of $50.39 (a 42.0 percent return) on January 28, 2021.[76] Compare Gurney's activity to Named Plaintiff Abraham Huacuja, who purchased 2,200 AMC shares at an average price of $18.18 on January 27, 2021. Huacuja also sold his shares on January 28, 2021, at an average price of $13.00, for a loss of $11,393.93 (a -28.5 percent return).[77] These trades illustrate that slight differences in timing contribute greatly to profit or loss. Counterfactually speculating as to the timing of trades (i.e., whether and when investors would have traded in the but-for scenario in which Robinhood did not put restrictions in place) requires individualized inquiries. Moreover, the same investor could have both losses and gains on round trip trades depending on the timing of the trades. For example, Named Plaintiff Brian Harbison had an overall gain of $752.20 (a 10.7 percent return) from trading in AMC between January 26, 2021 and January 28, 2021.[78] However, Harbison only suffered a loss on his last roundtrip where he purchased 200 shares on January 27, at a price $15.98 per share, and sold the same shares on January 28 at $13.02 per share for a loss of $592.08.[79] Individualized inquiry would be required to determine whether (and how) a potential Class Member would have changed their trading behavior and therefore whether they would have sustained a net gain or loss in the Affected Stocks in the but-for world.

75. Price movements of the Affected Stocks were not even consistent during the Class Period. Plaintiffs allege that "…each time new restrictions were imposed, the prices of the Affected Stocks declined." See Complaint, ¶ 88. This claim is false. For example, there was no uniform negative price reaction to Robinhood's tightening of purchase limit restrictions in the afternoon of January 29, 2021. See Appendix E.

40. Plaintiffs also have no way of disentangling the effects of confounding events. As discussed above, multiple brokerages implemented trading restrictions in the pre-Class Period and during the Class Period. For example, Interactive Brokers Group, TD Ameritrade, and Charles Schwab restricted trading in options for GME and AMC on January 27, 2021.[80] In the morning of January 28, 2021, brokerages other than Robinhood also placed PCO and other restrictions on the Affected Stocks around the same time as Robinhood. Interactive Brokers' trading restrictions were reported on January 28, 2021 at 9:26 AM, eight minutes after Robinhood's trading restrictions were reported (and both were reported before the market opened at 9:30 AM that day).[81] Throughout the day on January 28, 2021, other brokerages, such as Ally Financial, E*Trade, Webull, M1 Finance, and Trading 212, placed AMC, GME, and KOSS on PCO status.[82] Separately, stock exchanges halted trading multiple times throughout the day on January 27 and January 28, 2021.[83] In addition to trading platforms restricting trading and stock exchanges halting trading, retail banks such as Citi and Wells Fargo informed its financial advisors that they could no longer recommend several of the Affected Stocks to clients, and Citi placed restrictions on margin transactions.[84]

41. I am not aware of any method that would be able to reliably isolate the impact, if any, of Robinhood's trading restrictions from the restrictions of the other brokerages, stock exchange trading halts, and other financial institutions' restrictions that were implemented simultaneously with Robinhood's restrictions.[85] This also demonstrates the lack of any common methodology to measure damages, if any, caused by Robinhood.

85. In addition to disentangling the effects of restrictions by other brokerages, I am not aware of a common method that would measure the relative contribution, if any, of transactions, such as canceling purchase orders, liquidating customers' shares, and closing out options from the alleged impact of Robinhood's PCO restrictions and position limits.

Event Study Model

1. An event study is a statistical method commonly used in financial economics to measure the impact of events on stock returns.[1] It is standard practice in event studies to take into account the effect of market factors on stock returns. This is typically done by: (1) estimating the historical relationship between changes in a company's stock price and changes in the performance of a market and/or industry index; (2) using the historical relationship and the actual performance of the market and/or industry index on the day in question to calculate an expected return; and (3) subtracting the expected return from the actual return to derive a residual return (sometimes referred to as an "abnormal return" or "market-adjusted return"). Accordingly, the residual return on a particular day is net of market and industry factors that affected the stock price on that day. In this case, I estimated the relationship between the Affected Stocks' returns, the broad market index return, and the returns of various industry indices based on each company's self-identified list of competitors reported in their 2020 annual filings using daily data for the 120 trading-day period prior to January 1, 2021.[2] I then compared the expected return for the Affected Stocks using the results of my event study model to the actual returns for each day during the pre-Class Period. Table 1 lists market and industry indices for each of the Affected Stocks.

2. See, e.g., M.L. Mitchell and J.M. Netter, "The Role of Financial Economics in Securities Fraud Cases: Applications at the Securities and Exchange Commission," Business Lawyer 49, No. 2 (1994): 545-590, at 568, which states that the estimation period for an event study "typically ranges from 100 to 300 trading days preceding the event under study."; A.C. MacKinlay, "Event Studies in Economics and Finance," Journal of Economic Literature 35, No. 1 (1997): 13-39, at 15, which states that "in an event study using daily data and the market model, the market model parameters could be estimated over 120 days prior to the event."

Market and Industry Indices for the Affected Stocks

	Affected Stock	Market Index [1]	Industry Index [2]
1	AMC	S&P 500	Equal-Weighted Portfolio of Cinemark and IMAX
2	Bed Bath & Beyond	S&P 500	S&P 500 Specialty Retail Index
3	BlackBerry	S&P 500 [3]	S&P 500 Information Technology Index
4	Express	S&P 500	Dow Jones U.S. Apparel Retailers Index
5	GameStop	S&P 500	Dow Jones U.S. Retailers Index
6	Koss	S&P 500	Equal-Weighted Portfolio of Apple and Sony
7	Nokia	S&P 500	Equal-Weighted Portfolio of Adtran, Amdocs, Arista, Aviat, Calix, Ceragon, Ciena, Cisco, Commscope, Ericsson, HPE, IBM, Juniper, Motorola, and Oracle
8	Tootsie Roll	S&P 500	Dow Jones US Food Producers Index
9	trivago	S&P 500	Equal-Weighted Portfolio of Airbnb, Booking, Expedia, Facebook, Google, Hilton, Marriott, Trip.com, TripAdvisor and Twitter

Notes:
[1] Unless otherwise noted, market indices were obtained from the stock performance chart contained in each company's 2020 annual filing.

[2] Where available, we used the industry index reported in each company's stock performance chart from their 2020 annual filing. For companies that do not report an industry index, we used an equal weighted index of competitors listed by each company in their 2020 annual filing and excluded foreign competitors with no ADR and companies that traded over the counter.

[3] BlackBerry is traded on both the TSX and the NYSE. Blackberry's 2020 10-K, p. 26 includes the TSX Composite Index in its stock performance chart. Given that the majority of BlackBerry's trading volume occurred on the NYSE, we used the S&P 500 as the market index.

2. When performing event studies, the conventional practice in finance is to test the "null hypothesis" that the residual return is zero against either the alternative hypothesis that the residual return is different from zero, or the alternative hypothesis that the residual has a particular sign (i.e., it is positive or it is negative).[3] If the null hypothesis cannot be rejected at

Schwert, "Using Financial Data to Measure Effects of Regulation," Journal of Law and Economics 24, No. 1 (1981): 121-158; D.R. Fischel, "Use of Modern Finance Theory in conventional levels of significance, then the residual returns are not considered to be statistically significant, i.e., they are not considered to be significantly different from zero. Under these circumstances, one concludes that the observed stock return on a particular date can be explained by the independent variable(s) considered in the estimation model (and is not attributable to the firm-specific events which occurred on that date).

3. In event studies, the statistical significance of the residual returns is typically assessed by calculating a standardized measure of the size of the residual return known as a "t-statistic."[4] A t-statistic with an absolute value of 1.96 or greater denotes statistical significance at the 5 percent level of significance (a conventional level at which such assessments are made) in a "two-tailed" test of statistical significance.[5] In a two-tailed test, the null hypothesis is that the residual return is zero, and the alternative hypothesis is that the residual return is different from zero (i.e., either positive or negative). A t-statistic with an absolute value of 1.65 or greater denotes statistical significance at the 5 percent level of significance in a "one-tailed" test of statistical significance.[6] In a one-tailed test, the null-hypothesis is that the residual return is zero, and the alternative hypothesis is that the residual return has a particular sign (e.g., it is positive).

4. Moreover, even if one finds statistically significant price movements from an event study, an economist must take another crucial step. If an event study finds a statistically significant price movement that is contemporaneous with a public disclosure of companyspecific information, an economist must closely examine the disclosures involved. For example, if the particular disclosure at issue was simply repeating information previously disclosed information (i.e., stale information), an economist could not attribute, consistent with efficient markets, an abnormal return – regardless of whether it happens to be statistically significant – to such a disclosure. Disclosures that simply repeat information previously disclosed would not cause a revision in the company's expected future cash flows and, hence, would not affect the company's stock price. Separately, a company may disclose multiple pieces of information contemporaneously (stale and new) on a day when an event study finds a statistically significant price movement. In this case, an event study analysis alone cannot determine which piece of information is new value-relevant information. Moreover, if there are multiple pieces of new value-relevant information, event study analysis using daily returns alone cannot reliably parse the price impact of the multiple new pieces of information.

(NYSE: GME), today reported worldwide sales results for the nine-week holiday period ended January 2, 2021 reflecting a 4.8% increase in comparable store sales and a 309% increase in E-Commerce sales. Total sales declined 3.1% driven by an 11% decrease in the company's store base due to its planned de-densification strategy, temporary store closures around the world due to government mandates and lower store traffic, particularly later in December, due to the significant impacts of COVID-19. The Company believes the industry-wide traffic decline during the Holiday period adversely impacted comparable sales for the nine-week period in the high single-digit to low double-digit percentage point range. In addition, significant worldwide supply chain constraints impacted the ability to distribute products to customers across all sales channels. However, the Company experienced unprecedented demand for recently launched gaming consoles, and while consumer demand far outpaced constrained supply in the nine-week period, the Company believes these products will drive sales well into 2021 as console availability from our suppliers improves later in the year." 							"On January 11, 2021, GameStop Corp. issued a press release announcing its sales results for the nine-week holiday period ended January 2, 2021." (GameStop Corp., Form 8-K, January 11, 2021, 08:33 AM) GameStop gave investors betting on the struggling vidogame retailer good news and bad news on Monday. The stock, for now, seems fixed on the former. The company (ticker: GME) reached a deal with Chewy co-founder Ryan Cohen's RC Ventures. Cohen, as well as former Chewy executives Alan Attal and Jim Grube, will join the company's board, now at 13 members. Cohen holds 13% of GameStop shares, according to a recent filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission. ... That news seemed to overshadowed a disappointing holiday sales release from GameStop . Percent Change in Price During Afternoon of January 29, 2021

Sources: TickData API; PCO_00589114.xlsx.
Notes: Plaintiffs allege that in the afternoon of January 29, 2021 Robinhood "significantly ratcheted up the share purchase restrictions in had put in place at the start of trading." Complaint, ¶¶ 84-85. Plaintiffs also allege that "…each time new restrictions were imposed, the prices of the Affected Stocks declined." Complaint, ¶ 88. For example, early in the trading day during January 29, 2021, purchase restrictions for AMC shares were 115. At 12:02 PM, Robinhood tightened the restriction by imposing a 25-share purchase limit of AMC shares. For AMC, BB, GME, KOSS, and NOK, the tighter purchase restrictions occurred at 12:02 PM on January 29, 2021. For BBBY and EXPR, the tighter purchase restrictions occurred at 13:36 PM on January 29, 2021. For TRVG, the tighter purchase restrictions occurred at 14:48 PM on January 29, 2021, and for TR, the tighter purchase restrictions occurred at 15:24 PM. We use intra-day prices for the relevant start times based on these times. We measured the price changes in the Affected Stocks from the time that the purchase restrictions were first tightened on January 29, 2021 to the last available intra-day price on January 29, 2021, which was 8:00 PM. The chart shows that from the time of the first purchase limit reduction to 8:00 PM, three of the Affected Stocks actually increased in price, contrary to what Plaintiffs allege.
