Hi Gretchen, I know you are probably fully on top of this but I have been a part of many many sevs here including 12/12, 12/13, 3/2, etc but somehow I feel very frustrated with our sev response today. Sometimes companies don't recover from things like this. (Think of something like #delete-uber campaign).

I understand the reasoning and agree that we had to PCO earlier today. that decision is fine.

But there are two things we ought to be doing but not sure where we are with them:

(Edited)

1. We should be trying to bring back trading in these securities like other companies asap. My understanding is that a lot of people worked very hard to try and bring them back but it was a no go.

2. If we cannot do that, we must write a very clear blog post explaining what exactly happened today. Personally, I think we should fully lay out our cards. Nothing short of that would do.

My slack is full of messages like this:

Going to echo this to you because i think it would be worth a consideration: I think Vlad should write a blog post to address what has went on, there's an opportunity here for our customers to feel sympathy for us rather than attack us

A lot of the hate we are getting is because nobody has accurate information about what's happening behind the scenes, and I don't see any reason why they shouldn't know

Our decision making seems to have sysmetically become too conservative/risk-averse but thats probably a conversation for some other day.

on <#CPCTVCD2M|1> that's not exactly true. we are doing everything we can to remove PCOs asap and applying contract limits

no worries. On <#CPCTVCD2M|1>, it would have been nice if we could have brought them back today but sounds like that would not be possible.
