Rejuvenated Rickie Fowler keeps it rolling

Adam Schupak
Golfweek | USA TODAY Network

DETROIT – Rickie Fowler has his swagger back.

It’s been building since the start of the 2022-23 PGA Tour season when he opened with a tie for sixth in the kickoff in Napa in September, played in the final group at the Zozo Championship in October, shot the first 62 in U.S. Open history this month and shot 60 last Saturday at the Travelers Championship. On Thursday, he made eight birdies and carded a 5-under 67 at Detroit Golf Club, three strokes off the early lead set by Monday qualifier Peter Kuest at the Rocket Mortgage Classic and matched by Taylor Moore.

On a warm, hazy day, the pros picked apart the softened Donald Ross layout. Fowler’s round could’ve been even lower had he not finished with a pair of bogeys at Nos. 8 and 9.

“To be perfectly honest, I had to go to the bathroom pretty badly, so luckily I just got drug tested so I went straight in,” he said. “There weren’t many bathrooms the last five holes so I was a little shaky coming in, and not to necessarily blame the finish on that, but it didn’t help.”

For the past few years, Fowler’s game has been shaky for other reasons. He hasn’t won since the 2019 WM Phoenix Open and didn’t qualify for the Masters for the second year in a row, and his world ranking plummeted to No. 103 at the start of the year.

“Rickie never had scar tissue,” said Cobra equipment rep Ben Schomin. “He never struggled at any stage in his career. Never had been in a slump. He’s back and I think he’ll play better than he’s ever played. A lot of that will be because of what he’s learned going through this.”

Fowler worked tirelessly to regain his form. For a while, many of those hours proved to be fruitless but he says he’s a better player for them. Perhaps the best lesson he learned as he worked through his slump was this: “I appreciate the good times because I know they’re not going to last forever,” he said.

Last year, Fowler missed the cut in the Motor City and his game was adrift. Asked to describe the difference between his game now and a year ago, he said, “It’s quite a bit different, just the confidence and self-belief and knowing what I’m capable of and what I’ve been doing and the consistency and kind of being able to build momentum,” he said. “That was something that I definitely didn’t have the last few years. Yeah, in a lot better spot.”

Fowler has improved to No. 35 in the Official World Golf Ranking and No. 9 in the Golfweek Sagarin Rankings, which better reflects a player’s recent performance.

He’s finished in the top 20 in 12 of his 15 starts this year. Next up is returning to the winner’s circle, but Fowler just wants to be in striking distance heading into the weekend. “That’s really all you hope for on a Thursday to get a tournament going is get out moving in the right direction,” he said.

Good starts have been eluding two-time major winner Collin Morikawa of late. Last week, in Hartford, he opened with 74 and missed the cut. He was quite pleased to shoot a bogey-free 66 on Thursday.

“It was an easy 6 under, it could have been a lot lower, but that’s kind of what I want, how my game should be really,” said Morikawa, who is seeking his first PGA Tour win since the ’21 British Open.

He credited a minor swing change that he made during a practice session after his Wednesday nine-hole pro-am round for his improved play, noting it is “still a work in progress.”

Two recent college stars who are benefiting from “PGA Tour U” – Haskins Award winner Ludvig Aberg out of Texas Tech and 2022 U.S. Amateur Sam Bennett out of Texas A&M – were among a group of seven players to shoot 65. Aberg hit all 14 fairways and held the lead at 9 under until he made bogeys at his last two holes.

Kuest, a 25-year-old BYU grad, has limited status on the Korn Ferry Tour and hasn’t gotten into an event yet this season based on his Q-school finish, so he decided to chase getting into tournaments on the big tour. He made four birdies in a five-hole stretch on his front nine en route to shooting 64. Asked what he would’ve been doing had he not earned one of four spots into the Rocket Mortgage Classic field on Monday, he said, “Probably fishing back in Utah.”

NBA FREE AGENCY

What we’re hearing on who may re-sign, be on move

Jeff Zillgitt and Anthony Gharib
USA TODAY

With the draft in the books, it’s time for one of the most unpredictable times on the sports calendar – NBA free agency. The ball drops at 6 p.m. EDT Friday when players and teams will be allowed to officially negotiate deals.

Unrestricted free agents will be able to sign with any team.

Restricted free agents can too, but the player’s original team can choose to match any offer and retain the player.

What we’re hearing:

Fred VanVleet will get paid. The Houston Rockets are willing to offer a two-year deal in the neighborhood of $80 million, and while the Toronto Raptors have interest in retaining the All-

Star-caliber guard, the Raptors are closer to a deal in the three-year, $90 million range as they weigh other financial obligations, present and future. ...

The Rockets are willing to spend money as they try to expedite their rebuild under first-year coach Ime Udoka. They also have interest in Brook Lopez, but as veteran NBA reporter Marc Stein reported, it looks like Lopez will re-sign with the Milwaukee Bucks, who also wants to bring back Khris Middleton. ...

The Orlando Magic are an interesting team to watch. They have solid young players in 2022-23 Rookie of the Year Paolo Banchero and 2021-22 All-Rookie performer Franz Wagner, and they had a strong 2023 draft, selecting Anthony Black No. 6 and Jett Howard No. 11. The Magic were in the play-in hunt until late in the season and were close to a .500 team the second half of the season. Don’t be surprised if they spend some money on a short-term deal to preserve salary cap space beyond 2023-24. ...

Green plans to keep an open mind in free agency as the Golden State Warriors would like him back. Figuring out salary and length of contract are the main issues. Three or four years at $25 million a season could get that deal done between Green and Golden State. Outside of the Warriors, the Sacramento Kings and Detroit Pistons are expected to have interest. New Phoenix Suns owner Mat Ishbia, who like Green played basketball at Michigan State, would love to add Green, but that would require a significant sign-and-trade. ...

Watch for Phoenix center Deandre

Ayton’s name to come up in trade scenarios, too. ...

The night the Denver Nuggets won the title, key reserve Bruce Brown said money wasn’t the only thing. However, he declined the final season of his deal to become a free agent this summer, and he will have interest including some from the Los Angeles Lakers, who lost to the Nuggets in the Western Conference finals. ...

It’s out there to some degree, but the Kawhi Leonard-Paul George pairing could be coming to an end as the Los Angeles Clippers explore trade possibilities. ...

The Dallas Mavericks would like to add another All-Star-type player alongside Luka Doncic and Kyrie Irving, who is expected to re-sign.

USMNT crushes St. Kitts and Nevis

Jason Anderson
Pro Soccer Wire
USA TODAY Network

The U.S. men’s national team may just have gotten back on track.

After opening the Concacaf Gold Cup with a frustrating draw with Jamaica, the USMNT held an offense vs. defense drill at St. Kitts and Nevis’ expense, taking 33 shots en route to a 6-0 win Wednesday night.

The Sugar Boyz were under siege immediately, blocking multiple shots in the opening seconds. The sluggish play that characterized the early portions of the USMNT’s 1-1 draw with Jamaica was nowhere to be found, and the chances arrived as expected.

The U.S. broke through after just 12 minutes, with Djordje Mihailovic smashing home Gianluca Busio’s cutback.

Fans had barely had time to cheer that goal when the second arrived. A USMNT corner ended up on the edge of the box, where Bryan Reynolds scored a birthday banger, scoring his first international goal in extraordinary fashion on the night he turned 22 years old.

Some skillful build-up play saw the USMNT slice through the defense, with Jesús Ferreira producing a clinical finish. In a span of just three minutes and 50 seconds, the USMNT had gone from a 0-0 scoreline to a three-goal advantage.

A win in their group stage finale on Sunday (7 EDT, Fox), when they face Trinidad and Tobago in Charlotte, North Carolina, will likely lock up a spot atop Group A.
